Q: How to use jquery image swap Can someone help me with this javascript code Lets say $('#image1') exists, and then $('#image2').show(); is triggered. Now I want to have the user click and swap #image1 with #image2 while I'm hiding #image1. When the user leaves #image2 then I want to hide the #image1 and show #image2 and so on. $('#image1').click(function() { $('#image1').hide(); $('#image2').show(); } A: You need something like this: function swapImage() { var btn = $('#image2'); var a = $('#image1'); a.hide(); btn.removeAttr('class').show(); btn.attr('id', 'image1'); } $(document).ready(function(){ $('#image1').click(function() { swapImage(); }); $('#image2').click(function() { swapImage(); }); }); And if you want it to start from image1, replace this line: btn.removeAttr('class').show(); with var a = $('#image2'); a.removeAttr('class').show(); (you need to change also that the id is image1 for image2 and vise-versa)

Q: What is the difference between _selector and _target? I am a total beginner to Python, so please bear with me. I've been reading the answer to this question: How to catch events with multiple target objects in WPF? and I see that the accepted answer uses an event handler like so: myButton.AddHandler( Button.ClickEvent, myEventHandler); and I notice that he uses an event handler with two parameters. First parameter is some function, called EventArgs, and the second parameter is the sender of the event, which is of type _target. What is the difference between those two parameters? A: The class has a separate event definition for various event sources, i.e. different classes that are capable of generating the event. For example, Button has the ClickEvent event, while TextBox has TextChangedEvent. These are separate because a single TextBox can have multiple events with separate parameters. From MSDN: When an event is raised on an object, it is actually handled by the event handler for the object's class. (Typically, event handlers are stored as instance methods named the same as the event they handle.) This handler can be any method without parameters and named like the event. It is associated with a particular object by the name of the event.

They were diagnosed as rheumatoid nodules and the symmetrical distribution of the nodules suggested a bilateral syndrome. Histologic findings of the nodules showed histiocytic infiltration. The postauricular and preauricular lesions were located, respectively, on the face and the neck, which is a rare site of the disease.

Q: Why SSE3 doesn't fit well with the C compiler in Android? I have a program that uses SSE3 for optimizing. I tried to build it with Android Studio 2.3.3 but failed. It gives a message "this instruction doesn't fit into it." Is there any way to use SSE3 for Android? I think it would be great to optimize the rendering speed and battery consumption. A: ARM does not support any version of SSE3 and is going to continue to maintain SSE3
